The board makes it a priority to find board members to reach the minimum again.

4. An Assembly must be announced by the board to the members at least fourteen (14) days in advance in writing or by email. The announcement contains the points and proposals to be addressed during the meeting, as well as the location, date, and time of the meeting.

Votes on people are cast in writing, votes on affairs orally, unless the assembly prefers a written vote. In case a vote on affairs is split (i.e., exactly half of the votes is in favour), the proposal is rejected. In case of an election, the person with more than half the votes wins. In case no one has that majority, a second election is held between the two people with the most votes, where the one with the majority of the votes wins. In case a vote on people is split, the President and Secretary will represent approval and rejection, respectively. They will play a game of Mikado (if they are incapable to do so, they can appoint another member present to fill in) in order to decide who gets to call a coin toss, deciding the matter.
2. The total amount of votes is the amount of valid votes cast. Blank votes are not valid votes. Blank or invalid votes are used only to determine the quorum.
3. Decisions made at an Assembly are valid only when the society-owned game of Mikado and coin are present.
4. A call made by the President on the outcome of a vote is decisive. However, if the outcome is disputed immediately after the call is announced, the vote is re-done in case votes were cast orally, and recounted if votes were cast in writing. The second ballot is the final decision and any effects from the earlier vote are disregarded.
5. All members are required to accept the decisions made at the Assembly, regardless of whether they were present during the decision. They also commit themselves to co-operate with implementing the decisions.
